8 Essential Tips for Fighting Summer Learning Loss

Richard E. Bavaria, Ph. D., Sylvan Learning's Senior Vice President for Education Outreach, shares some thoughts and tips about how you can help your children fight "summer slide":

- 1. You're in charge. Yes, summer is a time for relaxation, for hobbies, for fun. But that doesn't mean you want your kids' minds to be turned off, or worse, turned to mush from too much staring at electronic screens. It's okay for you to insist that they read occasionally, learn something new, keep up their math skills in fun ways, and maybe even write a postcard or two.
- 2. Keep them reading. The world is full of interesting topics, and kids can read about them in books, magazines, online sites, and other outlets. The great thing about the summer is they can read about topics that interest them, without the pressure of a test. If you are looking for book suggestions, try www.bookadventure.com, where you can find books to match your child's interests and reading level.
- 3. Keep them learning. Summer learning should be fun. Allow kids to learn about the things they don't always get a chance to study during the school year. Encourage them to discover new interests and talents and to share these new interests with you.
- 4. Keep them counting. Math skills are important no matter what the season. Have the kids help you shop for groceries by looking for good deals. Plan for the family getaway by helping you map various routes—the shortest, the most scenic, the one that includes everyone's favorite sites. Figure out tips at restaurants or measure for a garden.
- 5. Keep them writing. As a family, keep a summer journal. Have everyone write a few lines each day about important and not-so-important events. The weather, the rainfall, the consecutive sunny days, the growth rate of the tomato plants. Favorite movies, TV shows, sporting events. People you've visited or who have visited you.
- 6. Relax the school-year routines. I'm a strong advocate for routines, especially during the school year. Homework, study, bedtime, playtime, family time, quiet time, attendance at religious services are all important routines that put structure and reliability in kids' lives. These routines can be relaxed during the summer, but kids still need the safety and comfort of routines. Let your family decide which routines are able to be relaxed.
- 7. Have family get-togethers. Kids love spending time with you. Make time in the family's schedule for regular dinners together, game nights, backyard fun, and informal times for relaxed conversations. Remember talking and listening?
- 8. Talk about school. Every once in a while talk about goals for next school year, especially if your child is making a transition to middle or high school. Or if he or she has had some challenges this year. Or if he or she has some personal goals that require your support and enthusiasm.
